WILL HOLD SPECIAL ELECTION ON ORLAND 4 YEAR HIGH SCHOOL

The special election to decide on the creation of a new community high school district for Orland Township will be held Saturday, June 28, from 6 a. m. to 5 p. m., in the Orland Park High School building. Originally, it was planned to include all of Orland and Palos Townships in the proposed new district but these have been changed and now include besides all of Orland Township, Districts 119, 120, and 121 in Palos Township, part of District 141 in Bremen Township and part of District 135 in Will County.

This will give a compact district with the high school located in almost the exact geographical center. Figures show that there will be not only sufficient revenue to support a fully accredited four year high school without any increase in the tax rates which would have to be paid to the Non-High School District to provide only a 3 year course, but to leave approximately $8,000 besides with which to provide extra equipment and facilities. This $8,000 represents tax money that has in the past been paid by this community into the Non-High School District fund over and above the amount actually used to run the Orland school and which has gone to support schools in other districts besides Orland.

Under the Community High School setup, every cent of tax money could be spent in and for the Orland school district. The creation of the proposed new district would also make available free state aid transportation for all students living beyond walking distance from the school. It would provide an accredited four year high school, in and for the Orland community, locally controlled and adapted to and responsive to changing local needs. By eliminating the necessity of student transfer at the end of their third year to finish their courses in other schools, it would attract permanent residents with the consequent increased property values resultant from real estate development.

The findings of the Committee on Reorganization, showing the sources of anticipated income, the cost of operation and all the details of the proposed four year High School plan have been embodied in a five page mimeographed booklet which is being mailed to all box holders in the proposed new district. They will also be sent to all those interested in the matter. Mr. P. G. Rawland, Orland High School or call him at Orland 51. All voters in the community are urged to study the booklet carefully before they vote on the proposition to create the new district at the election, June 28th.

Can Use Motor Fuel Tax For Mokena Road Repairs

In response to his letter to W. A. Rosenfield, Director of the Department of Public Works and Buildings at Springfield, Illinois relative to state aid for the road running west of Mokena, L. G. Bruder of Mokena has received the following reply: "The Governor has referred your letter of May 12, concerning Francis road from Mokena to Pilcher Park, to me.

"This road is not one which comes under the jurisdiction of this Department, and there is therefore no legal authority for the expenditure of State funds for its improvement. About one-half mile of the road immediately west of Mokena is State aid route, and as such it would be eligible for improvement by Will County, using motor fuel tax funds allotted to the county by the State, or any county funds which might be available for road improvement. Social Agencies Plan Recreation For U. S. Soldier

Club Houses to Entertain And Help Utilize Their Idle Time.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

WASHINGTON.—Six of the country's leading social and welfare agencies will utilize their combined resources to combat undesirable influences arising in army camps over the country.

President Roosevelt has urged all Americans to support the movement which is known as U.S.O., United Service Organization for National Defense. A fund of $10,765,000 must be raised to carry out its program and the campaign is already under way.

Agencies participating in the work are the Young Men's Christian association, National Catholic Community service, Salvation Army, Young Women's Christian association, Jewish Welfare agency, and the National Travelers Aid association. Their aggregate experience in this kind of service is 317 years. The YMCA has been active in army and navy social and welfare work since 1861. Others since 1917.

The program is being carried out from closely co-ordinated plans, approved by the government, which will prevent the overlapping of social club houses, supplies, entertainment, etc., common in the past when co-operation was lacking among the various agencies undertaking this work. Few new positions will be created as the agencies will draw heavily on their own carefully trained personnel to insure the best in service. It was decided to weld the agencies into one huge unit, by the President, cabinet members, state governors and other officials because of requests from thousands of parents and because it was believed too big a project to be handled by any one agency.

Woman Defense Workers.

More than 350 clubhouses will be completed and staffed just outside army and navy bases. Military influence wanes when soldiers are beyond military boundaries and one object of the program is to give the soldier and sailor respite from military discipline. And the opportunity to enjoy social activities in preparation for the stern duties that may lie ahead. Another feature of the U.S.O. will be the home hospitality, locally, where friendly family reception will be fostered. It will also cope with the living and welfare problems of women in defense industry.

Business and government leaders are backing the program with enthusiasm and help. James A. Farley, former postmaster general, said: "It's our chance to show we are solidly behind our first line of defense. We can't afford to fail."

Walter Hoving, business executive and head of the Salvation Army Association of New York City, is president of U.S.O. District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey of New York county is U.S.O.'s national campaign chairman. Co-chairmen of the national Woman's Executive committee are Mrs. F. Louis Slade and Mrs. Eliot Cross. Mrs. Slade is a national director of the girl scouts. Mrs. Cross headed the women's bureau of the YMCA in Paris during the World war.

Health of Workers.

Dr. Ira S. Wile, noted psychiatrist, told U. S. authorities that "homesickness," the scourge of the new soldier, will be greatly minimized by the program. He stressed the importance of maintaining the "sound and healthy minds in healthy bodies," for men and women in our defense forces.

The U.S.O. will be non-sectarian and devoted exclusively to providing places of clean entertainment and fun for men and women of all faiths and beliefs, say officials of the program.

Axis Guns Trained on 'The Rock'

Spanish soil now bears Nazi guns, and as the map above shows, the territory of Spain and Spanish Morocco form the jaws of a vise that can trap the British Mediterranean fleet or force them to flee towards the Suez, where a threatened drive by the Germans may bottle them up. The big Nazi planted guns awaited only the word of Hitler to loose a storm of steel into the rock fortress of Gibraltar. Concealed miles back and protected by the hard rock of the Ronda range, other powerful Axis artillery would join the coastal guns in any action. Gibraltar's guns are not heavy enough to silence the long-range hill batteries, even if they could be located. Without a land base from which their observation and bomber planes could operate, the chances of the English fleet remaining in the Mediterranean sea hourly grows less.

Stamp Program Takes Up Slack In Loss of Foreign Food Markets

CHICAGO.—As the food stamp plan moves into the third year, farmers, housewives, public officials, welfare administrators and chamber of commerce organizations carefully moisten and affix their own stamp of approval to the project.

This new method of administering a subsidy, so that the distribution system would serve broad social purposes and in general maintain the essential profit-and-loss principle, was the brainchild of Milo Perkins, former manufacturer and now head of the Surplus Marketing administration in Washington.

With reservations, the blue and orange economic gadget has worked to the satisfaction of those most concerned, as evidenced by the recent arrival of the political stork, who calmly deposited a little brother in the form of the cotton stamp plan and broadly hinted that the next arrival would be in the field of low-cost housing.

Lose Foreign Markets.

When foreign markets for surplus products, principally food, faded away in 1930, and the country was faced with one of its most vexing problems, "economy of abundance," the nation's leaders cast about for a solution. People actually faced starvation while living in the midst of plenty. Jobs and savings were gone and while foodstuffs rotted in the fields for want of market, crops were plowed under, acreage restricted and marginal land retired from cultivation, in a desperate attempt to set the wheels of industry rolling again. Scientific agriculture added to the country's woes by increasing the quantity of farm products with less labor, thereby further building up the unemployment roster.

Foreign trade agreements failed to save the country's $800,000,000 volume to them, because the purchasing nations were more interested then in making themselves self-sufficient and were eliminating all possible imports.

Search for Solution.

Vice President Wallace, then secretary of agriculture, sums up the situation as it appeared then to authorities in the capitol:

"First, we had to find a market for farm surpluses, and we knew that a surplus at one price might be a sell-out at another. Second, we didn't like the spectacle of people hungry from too little food while we were worrying over too much. Senator Vandenberg proposed to solve the first problem by sending our surpluses abroad and selling them at a lower price there, but some of us thought that if we were going in for a two-price system we'd better do it at home and let our own needy have the benefit."

Studies by nutritional experts revealed some startling facts. Working people were paying only between 10 and 12 cents per meal average while those millions on relief could only allot half of that amount for their food. The result of this was to continue to pile up foodstuffs in bins all over the country.

Despite its shrinkage the major hope was still that of the domestic market because our own people would continue to buy food regardless of the disappearance of the foreign markets due to the war. After other methods had been found unsatisfactory or inadequate, such as soup kitchens for the needy and to utilize surplus wheat, lunches for school children, direct distribution of hams and other meat to households and other schemes, the food stamp plan was created.

It was first tried out in Rochester, N. Y., and is now well known and popular in the country's largest metropolis, New York city. Approximately 350 areas are now benefiting by the plan while about 1,500 more have applied to Washington.

Direct savings of $200,000 is shown by the statement of Commissioner William Hodson of the New York city department of welfare and the food stamp plan this year will cost only $77,000 as compared with the $277,000 cost direct distribution of government-purchased supplies previously.

Said Mr. Hobson, "People like the plan for many reasons. One is that they can purchase what they want, when they need it, like the rest of us do. Another because they know they can arrange a more healthy diet, and the savings will stretch the city's budget for relief cases and that is no small item."

Milo Perkins, originator of the idea, added his views on the subject by saying:

Predict Wide Benefits.
"The conservatives like it," he said, gulping down some of Brazil's surplus coffee from a paper cup, "because it goes through the regular channels of trade and spreads its benefits all along the line. They feel safer about it that way than if the government had set up its own machinery of handling. In the second place, they like it because it creates purchasing power for things they feel it a disgrace for any American to have to do without, like nourishing food. And in the third place—and you hear more about this now than when the plan started—they regard it as a hedge against trouble in the future. You'll find them talking already about what's going to happen when this war activity ends."

Improve Distribution.
"The liberals like it because they regard it as a new kind of money, and they have an obscure feeling that these blue-and-orange tickets give the needy an access to the kind of wealth they most need to have. Also, they are pleased because the plan makes it possible to distribute certain types of things that can't effectively be given away. They think our present system of distribution needs remodeling, and they'd far rather have government money spent for the better distribution of food than for buying and hoarding it while people go hungry."

"As for the middle-of-the-road man, he likes it because it makes sense to him. He's found some of the government's programs pretty hard to tie in with his own experience, but tell him 'Let's fix it so the hungry eat the surplus and he's all for it.'"

In the race between food production and consumption, with the honors too strongly with production today, there is a theoretical solution to the problem, according to the Washington experts. They suggest that a way be found to raise to $100 per month the income of all families receiving less than that today. They point out that the national expenditure for food alone would increase by approximately $2,000,000,000, which would greatly assist the farmer, and in turn, the city man, as about one-half of this amount would revert to the farmer.

President being urged to increase aid to Britain . . . Commodity shortages of World War I are coming again, but in different form.
(Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.)

WASHINGTON.—There is tremendous pressure on President Roosevelt from those who like his word "realist" with respect to the war to take some active step NOW instead of waiting until it is so much harder.

Such a practical step, for example, as the seizure of Dakar, the Cape Verde islands and the Azores.

Excitement has been lent the arguments now going on inside administration circles by wild rumors floating on the outside. Before the President made his comment about having forces in "strategic" places there was a rumor, for example, that the main fleet had passed through the Panama canal! This could only mean that the sea power of Uncle Sam was to be added to that of Britain in the battle of the Atlantic.

For the Nazis to attempt to seize Iceland, as they seized Crete, would be, in the President's words, a threat to invasion of the United States. This brings the war very close indeed, for there has been plenty of planning by the Nazis with respect to Iceland. In fact it is difficult to imagine any other purpose for the tremendous concentrations the Germans have made on the Norwegian coast.

ISLANDS ARE NEUTRAL

When it comes to the Cape Verde islands and the Azores, however, the problem is complicated by the fact that those islands are neutral. True, the President himself said that at any time they are ready the Nazis are able to overrun Spain and Portugal, but seizure of the islands by the U. S. in ADVANCE of such an invasion would be imitating the international morals of the Nazis.

And yet such lack of international morality is precisely what is needed in this situation, a great many advisers of the President believe. They insist that you cannot fight Marquis of Queensbury rules against an antagonist who uses the knee and gouges in the clinches. If one fighter elects to follow bar-room-brawl tactics the other fighter has not much choice.

The chief difficulty here is that we have NOT entered as a fighter. Technically we are neutral, though the strangest neutral, perhaps, in the world's history. We are not only in the corner of one of the fighters, but we are providing him with fighting power.

Commodity Shortages Seem Probable

Remember the "gasolineless days" last war? The days when anyone driving a passenger automobile on Sunday was regarded by passersby as pretty nearly a traitor?

Those days are coming again, but this time there will be different things we will be asked to do without.

For the present, for instance, there is not the slightest indication that we will ever be told to cut down our sugar consumption. In the last war there was first a shortage, then severe rationing, with the waiter bringing you a couple of lumps in a paper sack instead of handing you the bowl. Then right after the war sugar soared to 17 cents a pound, and beyond.

But up to now there has not even been any raising of the quota bans on sugar production. Every indication is that there will be plenty of sugar regardless of developments.

The first important appeal to the public to do without something applies, curiously enough, to electricity.

In a statement signed by the federal power commission, the Office of Production Management, the war department, the Tennessee Valley authority, the Alabama Power company, the Georgia Power company, the Gulf Power company, the Mississippi Power company and the South Carolina Power company, the people of the Southeast are asked to conserve electric current.

"The Southeastern area," says this statement, "is a large contributor to this defense production. In addition the area has been chosen for the location of many army cantonments, air training bases, munitions plants and other defense facilities. These defense activities require a great volume of power. This year an unprecedented drought threatened that power supply throughout the Southeast."

"Large additions of power supply for the region are now under top speed production by TVA and private companies. They are nearing completion but until these new sources of supply are actually delivering power and especially during the next few months it is imperative in the interest of defense that power be carefully conserved."

The statement added that even if normal rainfall should end the drought you still will be asked not to waste power, for every kilowatt hour you can conserve at this time adds that much to your nation's capacity for defense.

Injections For Hernia Need Truss

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

DURING the last World war, there was a large number of recruits found to have hernia. They had the choice of undergoing an operation or dropping out of the army. Those that underwent an operation were in a hospital three to four weeks, remained home another three to four weeks, after which they were usually allowed to go on full duty.

TODAY'S HEALTH COLUMN

What about the injection method of treating hernia? The injection method was in bad standing with the medical profession at that time owing to the fact that it was being done by other than physicians or by physicians without sufficient surgical training. In addition to this, the fluid used to sclerose or harden the tissues to prevent hernia coming through was not always satisfactory.

Dr. Barton

Ninety Percent Cured.

Today, some surgeons report 90 per cent cures in carefully selected cases, while the lowest percentage of cases selected for the injection method is now about 30 per cent, 90 per cent of which obtain a cure.

What type of hernia is suitable for the injection method? While surgeons are not in complete agreement on what are suitable cases, it is agreed that—

- hernias that have occurred recently,
- hernias in thin individuals,
- those in which the hernia can be readily pushed back into the abdomen, and
- those who are older and would not undergo operation too well can be called suitable cases for the injection method.

Truss Necessary.

Dr. Lazarus Manoil of New York city, in Archives of Surgery, states that, in addition to a safe and effective "hardening" substance, the use of a well-fitting truss is absolutely necessary. The truss must be worn day and night during the entire time the injections are given two or three times weekly for six to eight weeks. After injections have been completed, the patient must remove the truss at night but wear it during the day for four to six months.

New Treatment for Varicose Ulcers

ONE of the mean ailments often found in hospital clinics is varicose ulcers.

Varicose ulcer is due to weak veins. Just as one can inherit strong blood vessels—arteries and veins—so can one inherit weak vessels. Certain work, such as standing, causes varicose veins and ulcers, but Dr. Josephus C. Luke, Royal Victoria hospital, Montreal, in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, points out that the tendency toward varicose veins is always present in these cases.

In order to save time of patients, nurses and physicians, Dr. Luke reports upon a method of treatment which combines most of the good points of other methods of treatment. This treatment consists of tying off of the great surface vein of the leg high up near the groin and then injecting a hardening solution down the vein in the lowest part of the leg.

Dr. Luke had performed 146 such operations upon 123 patients during the previous 16 months, 83 being for uncomplicated varicose veins and 58 in which a varicose ulcer was also present. These operations were performed under a local anesthetic—patient not put to sleep—in the outpatient operating room, the patient returning home immediately after the operation.

What were the results following this method? "The healing of the long-standing ulcers following this method is phenomenal. The pain is relieved immediately. Recent ulcers heal in a week and long-standing ulcers in about six weeks." The patient is allowed to walk about at home for about a week and a strapping, applied following operation, is worn for about one month after the ulcer is healed.

QUESTION BOX

Q.—Two or three hours after I have eaten I get a burning pain in my stomach. The only relief is more food or liquid. I'm always getting shooting pains from my side to my stomach. My doctor told me that I had a touch of ulcer.

A.—As you get the pain two or three hours after eating it is likely that your doctor states that you have or are getting an ulcer. Diet and alkalies are the usual treatment.

One man up before his board was very small of stature. Addressing the man at the table who was sitting, the potential "cannon fodder" stood and pounded the table with great vigor.

"I won't go, you will have to exempt me. I'll fight before I'll go." The one at the table lost his ordinarily well-kept patience. He arose and rolled up his sleeves. The c.f. looked at his six-foot frame of muscle, which he had not noticed before, it being wrapped around the table legs, and quickly a smile creased his face.

THE SMOKY YEARS

By ALAN LE MAY W.N.U. Release

INSTALLMENT 15 THE STORY SO FAR:

Dusty King and Lew Gordon had built up a vast string of ranches. King was killed by his powerful and unscrupulous competitor, Ben Thorpe. Bill Roper, King's adopted son, was determined to avenge his death in spite of the opposition of his sweetheart, Jody.

Bill glanced at Shoshone to make sure that the man was at his elbow; then, his gun out, he flung wide the door. The slab door resisted, wedged in the ice of the sill; then shuddered open with a noisy violence.

Roper stepped in with a sideways step that at once made room for Shoshone and brought Roper within the wall, clear of a possible shot from behind him in the dark.

"Don't anybody move!" The uncertain and flickering light of the little fire seemed to fill the room with ample light, compared to the heavy darkness without. A man who sat upon a keg by the fire sprang up, his clawed hand reaching out to a gunbelt that lay upon the crude table; but the reaching hand rose empty in a continuous motion as the man put up his hand. Three crude bunks ranged along the rear wall. From the first of these, the one nearest the fire, a man came out with his hands up; one of his arms was heavily bandaged, and its upward motion carried its sling with it.

Now Shoshone, whose heel had kicked the door shut behind him as he came in, made a headlong dive into the second of the three bunks. In that instant the thing happened that Roper most dreaded, so that in a single split fraction of a second their chances were irrevocably hurt.

As Shoshone Wilce sprang, a gun smashed out from within the shadowy bunk. The blast of its explosion was magnified in the close quarters, leaving the ears ringing in the instant of stunned silence that followed.

The barrel of Shoshone's .45 had crashed upon the skull of the man in the bunk almost in the same instant that the shot was fired. A lean hand, gripping a six-gun, dropped out over the side of the bunk, relaxed slowly, and the six-gun slid to the floor from long, dangling fingers. Shoshone Wilce held absolutely motionless for a moment, half crouched, then straightened slowly.

"Shoshone—you hit?" "It's only—" Shoshone began. His face was ghastly and his voice quavered; but when he had fully straightened it steadied again into the same dead flatness as before. "It's only—a kind of scratch along the ribs. I'm all right."

"Jody! Jody, is it you?" Jody Gordon had been curled up in the corner of deepest shadows. She stood up now, white-faced, her movements uncertain. Then suddenly the frelight caught the glint of the instant tears which overbrimmed her eyes.

"Bill! I thought they'd kill you!" She flung her arms about his neck and with the swift impulse of a child, kissed his mouth.

The man nearest the table made a sidelong movement toward the holstered gun that lay there; Bill Roper smashed a shot into the wall beside him, and the man jerked backward. "Shoshone, can you ride?"

There was a curious strain in the flatness of Shoshone's voice. "I'm okay, I tell you."

Bill Roper caught up a sheepskin coat with his free hand, and flung it over Jody's shoulders. "Get gone!" he snapped. "Shoot free the ponies' tie-ropes, and ride like hell! Here—take this!" He thrust the gun belt from the table into Jody's unready hands. "I'll see you—where I said."

"Bill," said Shoshone, "if it's the same to you, I'd rather hold them here while you ride with her."

"Get gone, I said! You—"

"Bill, I tell you, I—"

Bill Roper bellowed at him, "You want to die?" "Okay," Shoshone said, in that same strained, lifeless tone. He seized Jody's wrist, tore open the door with the hand that still held his gun, and was gone into the dark.

When they were gone Bill Roper stood listening. Outside two shots rang, a moment apart, as Shoshone shot the tied ponies free; then sounded a swift crackle of the ice crust under their hoofs as two horses galloped down-valley, and Roper knew that Shoshone and Jody Gordon were on their way.

Bill Roper estimated that he had a few seconds left. Unhurriedly, almost leisurely, he picked up the gun dropped by the man in the bunk, and thrust it in his own belt. After that he collected three or four other weapons in a brief search that seemed perfunctory, yet was effective because of his own practiced knowledge of where a range rider is apt to put his gun. These he kicked into a little heap beside the door, so that he would know where they were.

The man with the wounded arm spoke thickly. "You'll never get out of here alive," he told Roper. "I wouldn't worry about that, was I you," Roper said. He slammed another harmless shot over the speaker's head, interestingly close to the man's scalp. He needed a continued sound of action at the cabin to draw the outposts in, so that Shoshone and Jody Gordon would have their chance to get clear.

Gordon, and her father. After breaking Thorpe in Texas, Roper conducted a great raid upon Thorpe's vast herds in Montana. Unable to reconcile her father with Roper, Jody set out with Shoshone Wilce to find him. They were attacked by some of Thorpe's men hiding in Roper's shack. Wilce escaped, but Jody was captured. Roper left to look for Jody when told she had disappeared. He accidentally met Wilce. Together they prepared to rescue her.

After that a full minute passed and stretched to a minute and a half. Evidently the outposts had been farther away from the cabin than Shoshone had calculated; but Roper heard none of them fire.

He thought, "If I can keep them interested just ten minutes more—" Now a furiously ridden horse was coming up. Roper flattened himself against the wall beside the open door, and waited until he heard the man drop from his pony just outside. He stepped to the door, fired once; and a man crashed face downward upon the door sill itself to lie utterly motionless.

With his boot Roper pushed the inert heap off the door sill, so that the door might be closed at need. Because there were only two more shots in his gun, he picked up one of the weapons he had collected, and checked its loading.

"I'd stand real still if I was you," he warned the two who stood with their hands up. He fired one more shot between them, for purposes of general discipline. "I ought to kill you; maybe I will in a minute—haven't decided yet."

Now another horse was coming in fast; in another second or two it would string into view around the corner of the cabin.

"I'd stand real still if I was you."

Roper cast a quick glance to see that his captives were where he thought they were. They had not moved. He dropped to one knee beside the door and fired twice quickly as a shape, dark on darkness, whirled around the corner of the cabin.

That was all—the end of the one-man war he had started to cover the retreat of Shoshone. He never remembered the shock of the blow that downed him. All consciousness ended at once, as sharply as if cut off with a knife.

He never knew which of the two men behind him sprang forward to smash him down; but he knew as soon as he knew anything at all, that a long time had passed—more time than he could afford to lose.

CHAPTER XXI

Nobody but an old range rider could have located in the dark the brush corral where Shoshone Wilce and Jody Gordon were supposed to wait for Bill Roper. What would have been a simple problem by daylight, in darkness became a test of scouting ability and cowman's instinct. Yet somehow, by the throw of the land, and by his deep knowledge of the habits of thought of cowmen, Shoshone Wilce nosed out that circular corral of brush, in a darkness so thick that he was uncertain he had found the landmark until he had touched it with his hands.

A faint line of grey was already appearing on the rim of the world, and a whisky-jack was calling raucously somewhere in the scrub pine.

"It's almost daylight already," Jody Gordon said, fear in her voice. "If he doesn't come soon—if he doesn't come—"

She broke off, unable to go on. "Half an hour," Shoshone Wilce said. "We'll wait half an hour."

"And then—?"

"We've got to go on."

"I can't! Not if he doesn't come. We'll have to go back. We'll have to try—"

"He said go on. We have to do like he said," Shoshone's voice dropped to a curious fierce whisper. "Whatever happens—you remember that! You have to go on!"

They waited then, while five minutes passed. Shoshone Wilce kept his pony moving slowly up and down to prevent its stiffening up by too rapid a cooling after its run, and Jody followed his example.

"Listen here," Shoshone Wilce said at last. He dropped his voice, and sat motionless. For a moment or two there was no sound there except the rhythmic breathing of the hard-run ponies. "I want to tell you something," Shoshone resumed, his voice low, husky, and strangely unsteady. "It looks like I run away and left you when your pony was shot down. I see now it looks like that. But I want you to know I didn't go to do nothing like that, Miss Gordon."

"I know," she said, "it was the only—"

"I shouldn't have done it," Shoshone said. "I wouldn't do it if I was doing it again. I figured I'd be more use to you if I could keep my horse on its feet. I figured I could best handle it like an Indian would—pick 'em off one at a time, and make sure. But I'd do different if I had it to do again."

"What else could you have possibly done? There wasn't any chance for anything else."

"I should have stood and fought," Shoshone said. "Like he would have done."

"It was better this way," Jody told him. "Don't you worry about it, Shoshone."

Shoshone said vaguely, "I want you to tell him about it. I want you to tell him I'd do different if I had it to do again."

"Why don't you tell him yourself?"

"Maybe I will. But if anything comes up—so's I don't get the chance—"

"Of course I'll tell him."

They fell silent, and after that a long time passed. Shoshone stopped walking his horse, and sat perfectly motionless close to the wall of the brush corral. The grey light increased, while they waited for what seemed an interminable time.

It seemed to Jody that in a few minutes more they would have to admit that daylight was upon them; it seemed to her that an hour, two hours, had passed, instead of the half hour which Shoshone had decided they could wait. But still Bill Roper did not come.

"Do you suppose he could have ridden past?" Jody asked.

"No," Shoshone said, very low in his throat.

When she could stand the suspense no more, Jody Gordon dismounted; the inaction and the cold was stiffening her in the saddle, and now she led her pony while she stamped and swung her arms.

She thought, "I'll lead my pony five times around the outside of the corral. He'll be here by then; he must be here by then."

She wondered, as she slowly led her pony around the circle marked by the walls of brush, what she would do if Roper did not come—if he never came. Perhaps go on? Perhaps go back?

Jody Gordon was fighting back an overwhelming, impossible panic.

She knew the cool, hard sufficiency of the men against whom Roper had pitted himself. From the standpoint of her father, who had turned against him, she knew the unassuageable bitterness, the vast sinister malevolence which Roper had raised against himself by the miracles of the Texas Rustlers' War. If he were caught now in the grip of that malevolence—

It took all her will power to restrain herself from breaking into a run, or from mounting her pony and racing him—where? Any place, if only her high-strung nerves could find expression in action. But she forced herself to lead her pony slowly, measuring her strides while the daylight increased.

Then, as she completed the circuit of the corral, and came again to where Shoshone's pony stood, she saw that Shoshone Wilce no longer sat the saddle. At first she thought that he had tied his pony and walked away; but as she came nearer she saw that the little man was down in the snow, huddled against the rough brush of the corral barrier. Jody sprang forward, calling out his name.

She sprang forward, calling out his name, and there was a meaningless, nightmarish quarter of a minute while her pony reared backward from the sudden jerk upon its bridle and had to be quieted before she could advance again.

"Shoshone! What's the matter? Are you—are you—?"

Shoshone's eyes were half open; he was not asleep, but he did not answer. And now as she dropped to her knees beside him in the snow she saw that a bright trickle of red had traced a line from the corner of his mouth, crookedly across his chin.

"Shoshone!"

In the ugly panic that swept her it was many seconds before she could fully comprehend that Shoshone Wilce was dead.

FIRST JERUSALEM CONFERENCE ON WORLD MISSIONS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 15:6-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved, even as they.—Acts 15:11.

The conference on missions in Jerusalem was not the result of an appeal to a ruling church organization for a decision, but rather a gathering of the believers from Antioch with those in Jerusalem to confer regarding a serious difference of opinion. The earliest converts to Christianity were Jews, who had come by the way of Judaism into their new faith in Christ. But now, through the preaching of Paul and Barnabas, certain Gentiles had believed in Christ. Their new-found joy was soon beset by a theological problem. Certain teachers from Judea (Acts 15:1) declared that the Gentiles were not saved unless they came into the Christian faith the way of the fulfillment of the Jewish law. Paul and Barnabas at once realized that this was

I. The Vital Question—Is Salvation by Grace or Works? (vv. 7-11; see also vv. 1-5).

Paul and his fellow workers had rightly apprehended God's plan of salvation apart from works of the law. Paul realized that the entire future of the gospel ministry was in a sense dependent on the solution of this problem. Christianity is the only religious faith in the world that presents justification by grace as the way of redemption; all others follow (more or less) the path of salvation by works.

The question now was: Shall works of the law be mingled with grace—can Jesus Christ alone save men, or is salvation through Jesus Christ plus something else?

How was such a serious question to be settled? Should argument and strife be permitted to go on until the stronger party prevailed? Better judgment indicated the desirability of a friendly discussion and a joint decision with the believers at Jerusalem. This was

II. The Christian Solution—Council Rather Than Controversy (vv. 6, 7, 12-18).

There may be times when it becomes the duty of the Christian worker to take an uncompromising stand for the truth of God and refuse to be moved, come what may. But certainly there should be no such spirit in dealing with differing interpretations of Scripture on the part of sincere and earnest Christian brethren. How much would be gained in the Church today if, instead of magnifying differences and permitting personal desires and ambitions to intervene, men were willing to sit down in the spirit of Christ around the tables of Christian council and brotherhood, presided over and directed by the Holy Spirit (see Acts 15:28).

Observe the full measure of liberty in discussion, the attentive listening to the messages of the brethren. Note also that there were no secret sessions of a "steering committee" and no "steamroller" tactics.

The whole question was honestly and carefully considered by the council at Jerusalem, with the result that there was a vindication of the preachers of God's grace.

James finally spoke, giving the conclusion to which the Holy Spirit had led the conference (see v. 28). Here for all the future we have

III. The God-Given Answer—Salvation Is by Grace (vv. 19-21; see also vv. 22-35).

In his epistle to the Ephesians (Eph. 2:8, 9), Paul succinctly states this truth: "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast." The teaching of Scripture is very plain on this point, and we do well to receive it in all its beauty and grace.

Let us observe, however, that the decision in Jerusalem, while it laid no further burden on these Gentile believers (v. 28), did quite properly require of them that, as those who had been saved by grace, they must "walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4) which they had in Christ. Paul had the same thought in mind when he supplemented Ephesians 2:8 and 9 with verse 10, declaring that God has ordained that we should walk "in good works."

There are two opposite tendencies (both of which are wrong) in this matter, which consistently hurt the Christian church. The one which we have already stressed tries to mix works with grace, making salvation either entirely or partially by works. Sad to say, some who have sought to avoid this error have gone to the opposite extreme and have done violence to God's plan of salvation by making grace an excuse for sin, using their freedom from law as a justification of lawlessness. We are God's "workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works" (Eph. 2:10).

IS INFLATION INEVITABLE

"One of the things that has been outstanding in the second World War is that Germany has not had an inflation of prices in spite of their tremendous production of war materials and vigorous prosecution of the war. They learned a lesson after the inflation of the first war," states Farm Adviser C. A. Hughes. "The British learned this same lesson from their enemy and under a system of controlled production and consumption no particular inflation has taken place there. At the present time the United States is wisely inaugurating the same procedure under more difficult circumstances. "Inflation, and the depression that follows inflation are probably as bad as war itself. The one thing of importance in peoples' minds is 'will we be in for a period of inflation to be followed by an extreme depression? There are some things that are hopeful in this country and the world as bad as things are at the present time."

Cause of Inflation

Inflation is merely the result of a vicious cycle of raising prices. Increased employment calls for increased wages, the result is more buying. More buying causes higher prices and higher prices increases the cost of living. Higher cost of living demands more wages and thus a spiral of inflation is formed which eventually results in a buyers' strike, decreased production, unemployment and depression.

IN MEMORIAM

MARTI—Robert Nicholas. In loving memory of our dear son and brother, Robert, who left us so suddenly on June 20th, 1931. Ten sad and lonely years have passed.

Since our great sorrow fell; The shock that we received that day We still remember well. 'Tis hard to break the tender cord, When love has bound the heart, 'Tis hard, so hard to speak the words:

"We must forever part." Dearest loved one we have laid thee In the peaceful graves' embrace, But thy memory will be cherished, 'Till we see thy heavenly face.

Registration Day

Registration on July 1 of young men eligible for military training, but not heretofore registered will be conducted solely by Selective Service local boards in their headquarters or in public places designated by them, Paul G. Armstrong, State Director has announced. Aid of agencies outside the Selective Service organization is not expected to be required he said.

Although on October 16, 1940, the first registration day—many persons and organizations outside the selective service system assisted in the task of enrolling more than 1,016,000 potential trainees in Illinois, it is believed that the new registration will not require outside help.

Local boards will enroll the young men at the offices of the boards. Springfield News

NEWS FROM SPRINGFIELD
By
Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative Seventh District
General Assembly of Illinois

The crowds and the confusion in the corridors of the State house on Wednesday was typical of the closing days of the General assembly except that it was complicated by the addition of hundreds of county officials and township supervisors who were loudly protesting the passing of the Aid for Dependent Children bills in the House the day before. The crowds were so dense that it required the services of a husky sergeant-at-arms of the House to escort me to my coat and hat.

Members of the House were being "sent for" throughout the morning by their angry officials from "back home." To my knowledge no Cook County officials were in the protesting throng. At least I was not "sent for."

On casting our votes for the A. D. C. bills which were administration-sponsored after some delay, both Representative Sprague and I pointed out the weaknesses in the bills particularly the description of the term "needy child" which allows the administration of wide authority. We also warned the members of the increasing financial burden which the state would have to assume unless great care was exercised in the administration. One metropolitan newspaper said we had "praised the bills." The reporter's idea of praise was certainly different from ours.

The Senate which went into a filibuster on Thursday, will have to act on bills before they become law. And speaking of filibusters, the fight in the Senate over the reconsideration of the Chicago Park district pegged levy proved so entertaining that many members of the House spent more time in the Senate observing the fight than in their own seats voting on bills. On several occasions the majority floor leader had to send for members when their votes were needed. After some members of the Senate insisted on having all bills read in full, a boring and time-consuming process, the president pro-tempore moved for adjournment. Usually such difficulties are worked out during the week ends when tempers have had time to cool.

Study Pegged Levies

The real issue was the bill sponsored by Speaker Schnackenberg which provides for a commission to study the question of pegged levies. Originally it applied to Cook county but was amended to include the entire state. Since Chicago and Cook county are the only governmental units which use pegged levies, the bill is really a measure aimed at the study of the taxing bodies in Cook county such as the Chicago Board of Education, the Public Library of Chicago, the Chicago Park board, the Sanitary District and the County and Forest preserves of Cook county. This bill was the only one introduced by the speaker as his time is too busy with the management of the House to handle legislation. The controversy has removed conversation to some extent from reapportionment of the congressional districts. There will be no senatorial reapportionment unless a miracle happens.

On Thursday the House passed a $50,000 appropriation measure for building a series of dams in the DesPlaines river. The bill carried the names of Representatives McGrath, Sprague, John J. Gorman, Ruby, Houck, and Van der Vries. All are members from the 7th and 19th Senatorial districts.

Representative McGrath's bill to license handbooks passed the House on Tuesday. Representatives Van der Vries and Sprague did not support their colleague's bill.

An aftermath of the fight made on the A. D. C. bills by the township supervisors was a series of bills introduced by Representative Libonati of Chicago which called for the abolishment of the office.

Mental Health Bill

The Mental Health Bill introduced by the writer passed the House on Thursday by a vote of 122 to 1. The bill repeals the act concerning lunatics enacted in 1893 and sets up a procedure for the commitment of mentally-ill persons in line with modern treatment.

All House bills remaining in House committees have been tabled except those in the appropriation committee and those in the process of being enrolled in the committee for that purpose. The main work in the last two weeks will be that of voting on bills on the calendar. To know and understand the contents of hundreds of bills which will come up for a vote is a real problem.

Their Slogan is "WHERE QUALITY AND PRICE UNITE"

You will find no more reputable house in the automotive world of this section than The Lockport Sales and Service. With long experience and widely known in this section, they have all qualities which are required of a firm with whom you would trust your business. And nowhere is this feeling of confidence more reassuring to the buyer than when it is a matter of used car sales. One frequently finds bargains in used cars; in fact if honestly represented and sold, most used cars are bargains. But there are so many concerns selling used cars who refuse to fulfill their guarantee if the car goes bad that the used car purchaser is very cautious. But no one need have any fear in dealing with this concern as they mean what they say and their guarantee is good as gold. They consider that their reputation is at stake, in accurately representing and fairly pricing every used car they sell, and they desire to uphold that reputation. The man who knows automobile values comes here for used cars.

Today, more than ever, people are coming to realize the values in used cars, and to feel the need of dealing with reliable firms. The long-established reputation for fair and honest dealing is the best advertisement, and far more than anything we may say gives the reason for their continued support by the public.

When in Lockport, we suggest that you stop at the Lockport Sales & Service and meet Mr. Bergeron personally whom you will find a true-blue spirited gentleman, and who will be glad to assist you in finding a suitable car to suit your purse.

New 'Life Saver' for Premature Babies

FORD ENGINEERS HELPED DEVELOP THIS PORTABLE INCUBATOR

Through the combined efforts of Ford Motor Company engineers and Henry Ford Hospital officials at Detroit, a new low-cost portable baby incubator has been developed after 12 years.

Small and easy to handle, this "pigmy" life-saving outfit is expected to bring about a sharp reduction in the high infant mortality rate in rural areas. The portable incubator can be moved easily into isolated homes to help save the lives of premature babies.

Physicians all over the nation are looking with interest on the new unit because—compared to bulky incubators usually available only in large hospitals—it is small enough to be transported quickly in any emergency to isolated rural districts.

The outfit (shown above) is hardly larger than a clothes basket and fits easily on an automobile seat. It works when plugged into an ordinary light socket and can be set upon a kitchen table.

As a life saver for premature babies, this compact unit has been remarkably successful in Michigan. Twenty of the tiny incubators are strategically located in communities not able to purchase the larger ones and in sections not served by hospitals. Results are attracting wide attention.

As soon as arrangements can be made with a hospital supply company, the units will be manufactured and marketed on a larger scale, a Ford official said. The price will be held as closely as possible to actual cost—approximately $100.

ORLAND PARK

Thru the courtesy of the Chicago Motor Club, the following Orland Park school Safety Patrol boys were privileged to attend the Cub-Phillies Baseball game last Monday:

Eugene Yunker, Virgil Butler, Chas. Maddox, Richard Klotz, Roland Lach, Edward Gee, George Gee, and Joe Rust. Mr. Harriet Gee and Mrs. Edith Maddox furnished and drove their cars to take the boys to the game.

The Orland Park Boy Scout troop held their regular meeting in their cabin at Orland Lake Monday afternoon. The girls of the Young Woman's Missionary Society of the Orland Methodist church were also holding a picnic and pot-luck supper at the lake the same afternoon and the two groups met in a lively baseball game during the course of the afternoon.

Because of the unpleasant weather the annual picnic of the Christ Lutheran church scheduled to be held in the forest preserve last Sunday, was held in the Lutheran school building instead. Dinner was served by the Ladies Aid organization and the various picnic games and amusements played in the school and on the school grounds.

Laurel Camp No. 1796 RNA will meet at 8 p. m., Thursday evening, June 26th in the Legion Hall. All the members are urged to attend and report on results of "Galloping Tea."

John L. Betts, popular instructor in the Junior High School departments received his Masters' Degree from Northwestern University last week at the same convocation in which "Charlie McCarthy" Bergen was awarded a degree. John says that "Makes him and Charlie brothers."

Alva Don Jones and Jas. Howard Frundie of Orland and Wm. Doogan of Palos are the latest contributions to Uncle Sam's defense army from the Orland Selective Service Board. These boys left for induction into military service Thursday morning, June 19th.

Mrs. Jerry Conover and children and Mrs. Earl Reish and daughter Ethel spent last Tuesday in an outing at Lincoln Park.

Mrs. Blanche Walthers who with her husband Harry Walthers and Miss Lorraine Lee figured in an automobile accident southwest of Blue Island two weeks ago, is still under the care of a physician in the St. Francis hospital but is now considered out of danger. The injuries of both Mr. Walthers and Miss Lee were not so serious as at first thought and both have been discharged from the hospital.

At the annual election of the Orland Park Auxiliary of the American Legion held last Friday, the following officers were selected: Laura Cooper, first vice-president; Bertha Nicolai, second vice-president; Elsie Yunker, Treasurer; Lila Kruspe, Chaplain; Alice Sorley, Historian. As no president was selected at this meeting, Hazel Little, who has served in this office for the past year and Hilda Cox, who has served as secretary, will both hold over until a new President is elected.

The Daily Vacation Bible school sponsored by the Methodist church annually, will open Monday, July 7th and continue for 3 weeks. This school is non-sectarian in nature and it is hoped that not only members of the Church School but all the children in the community will avail themselves of the opportunity afforded by this school. Registration will be held Friday morning, June 20th from 10 to 12. A nominal fee of 25c a week will be charged to cover cost of supplies, etc.

An appeal has been received from the Methodist Old Peoples' Home for home canned fruits and vegetables.

Farmers Affected By Wheat Adjustment

Only farmers who have not cooperated with the rest of the nation's wheat growers in adjusting wheat production under the AAA farm program will be affected by the marketing quotas voted into effect May 31, it is explained by Byron Gaskill chairman of the Will County Agricultural Conservation Committee.

Unofficial returns in the nation give a total of 397,299 votes for and 96,114 against the marketing quotas, for a favorable margin of 80.5 per cent. The percentage in Illinois was 72.8, with 24,347 votes for and 9,103 votes against. Illinois led the states east of the Mississippi, where the average majority was 65 per cent. These figures do not include challenged ballots.

Will County wheat growers voted 52 yes and 7 no votes in the referendum, for a margin of 88 per cent in favor.

Farmers who have not cooperated in the AAA program will be subject to marketing quotas if they grow more than 15 acres, and if their acreage planted times their listed yield is 200 bushels or more.

In the case of wheat growers who have exceeded their AAA allotments and are subject to marketing quotas, the quota will be determined as follows:

1. The total wheat production in bushels for the farm will be determined.

2. The amount of wheat subject to penalty is the acreage grown in excess of his allotment times the normal yield or the actual yield, whichever is smaller.

3. The balance of the wheat grown on the farm is his marketing quota amount.

Wheat growers who have more wheat than their quota allows them to market will be able to store the wheat at a loan rate of slightly less than 60 cents, or 60 per cent of the wheat loan rate. Farm storage is considered especially advisable in view of an expected shortage of freight cars and commercial storage space.

To help keep the excess wheat from flooding the market, a penalty of about 48 cents, or 50 per cent of the loan, will be imposed on excess marketings.

The 1941 wheat loan rate to AAA farm program cooperators in Will County has been established at $1.07, it is announced by the County Agricultural Conservation Committee.

The basic loan rate in the United States, established at 85 per cent of parity through recent Congressional action is 98 cents. Terminal rates on which Illinois county rates are figured are $1.15 at Chicago and St. Louis, $1.17 at Evansville, Indiana, Louisville, and Cincinnati, and $1.16 at Cairo. These rates are for number two hard winter wheat and number two red winter wheat. Freight and handling charges are deducted in arriving at the county rate.

Farmers can secure loans for farm storage under the Ever-Normal granary provisions of the AAA farm program. Through the loan plan, the crop surplus is held off the market for use at some future time when the demand calls for it.

The loan rate to non-cooperators in the AAA wheat program who have produced excesses which must be stored under the marketing quota plan will be 60 per cent of the county rate, or 61 cents.

Any farmer who will be subject to marketing quotas is urged by the county AAA committee to get his marketing card in order immediately. All of his wheat marketings will be subject to penalty until he has a marketing card. Farmers who are within their AAA allotments automatically receive cards. Marketing quota violations can be prosecuted through federal courts.

Both cooperators and non-cooperators in the AAA program are advised to plan for farm storage of wheat under loan this year. Storage space this year is limited, and the national defense program has caused a huge demand for freight cars ordinarily used for transporting the wheat crop.

The voting by polling places in Will County was as follows: "FOR" Joliet 26; Ritchey 17 and Plainfield 9. "AGAINST" Joliet none; Ritchey 5 and Plainfield 2.

The record of votes for the state is YES 24,347. NO 9,103.

EVERYTHING FOR HER NEW KITCHEN
(See Recipes Below)

REALLY PRACTICAL!

Whether the bride-to-be is bound for a six-room "dream house" or for a one-room kitchenette apartment, you can't go wrong if you give her a kitchen shower . . . one that's practical, of course!

And, knowing that some of you are anxious for new, clever, unusual ways to entertain, I'm ready with plans for a kitchen shower that's really different!

In Chicago's huge Merchandise Mart, where buyers from all over the country come to purchase kitchenware, I found a variety of inexpensive, yet durable gadgets which anyone about to be married would love.

To make the party practically all play and no work for the hostess, I decided to place the gifts on the table (see picture at top of column). When luncheon is over, everything is hers!

The tablecloth is of a fancy new-type oilcloth, and the place mats and napkins are none other than dish cloths.

An angel food cake pan serves as the base for a "gadget bouquet" centerpiece of measuring spoons and cup, carving set, sugar scoop, funnel, spatulas, pancake turner, strainer, tea ball, grater and other vital kitchen helpers.

The plates are pie tins. The flatware is a very inexpensive kind with gaily-colored plastic handles. And note the spice jars to the right which, because they're to be gifts, hold salt and pepper while doing table duty. They're from the Griffith laboratories.

The first course of the luncheon is a tart "Cardinal Salad, set on the table right in its aluminum ring mold. A tasty Beef Stew in a casserole follows. Iced tea is poured from a tall aluminum pitcher into matching "glasses." And rolls, all buttered, are served from a compact, serviceable bun warmer, which may be the hostess' gift. Dessert is "Peach Upside Down Cake, served from a square cake pan.

*Cardinal Salad.

- 1 package lemon gelatin
- 1 cup boiling water
- ¾ cup beet juice
- 3 tablespoons vinegar
- 1 cup cooked beets, diced
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons onion juice or grated onion
- 1 tablespoon horseradish
- ¾ cup celery, diced

LYNN SAYS:

There'll be lots to talk about at your party, and conversation, plus opening of shower presents may well fill up the allotted party time, but just in case . . . here's a clever game that suits a bridal shower to a "T."

To each guest pass a slip of paper titled "Things Found in the Bride's Home." Neath the title are these words (1) engar, (2) gothorprpa, (3) elmiunol, (4) fubfet, (5) hicra, (6) rifhifcoen, (7) pavndorte, (8) blaet, (9) nurcaef, (10) pardyer, (11) kccol, and (12) pocarbud.

Ask each person to rearrange the letters in each of these 12 words to make them spell an article of furniture that would be likely to appear in the bride's new home.

The answers are (1) range, (2) photograph, (3) linoleum, (4) buffet, (5) chair, (6) chiffonier, (7) davenport, (8) table, (9) furnace, (10) drapery, (11) clock, and (12) cupboard.

To make the game more interesting, you might set a definite time limit. Collecting all papers after, perhaps, five minutes. Lollipops or some similar original, inexpensive gift may be awarded as first prize.

SHORT STORY

Too Much Admiration

By MEREDITH SCHOLL

(Associated Newspapers—WNU Service.)

GLENNA and Stuart Nichols had been married nearly a year when Stuart began to be alarmed because of the attention shown his wife by other men. It had always pleased him to see other men admire her, and to know that she belonged to him; that she was all his for good and forever.

Now, it seemed that Glenna was getting too much of a kick out of being admired and complimented. She was, thought Stuart, more interested in the attentions of other men; of pleasing strangers, rather than her husband.

This wasn't so good. Other men could admire her, but he wanted to be the big shot. He wanted to be the one whom she tried to please most.

There was a remedy for cases like Glenna's. Just now the thing had gone to her head. Since their marriage they had, as is the way with most young married people, got in with a new crowd. They joined the circle of married folks. New faces, different kind of parties, a changed atmosphere. And most of all, a new group of men—married men—to admire pretty, vivacious, young Mrs. Nichols.

There was a remedy for cases like Glenna's, and Stuart decided her case needed remedying. His most effective weapon, he knew, was the fact that Glenna loved him. He room, announcing that he was going out that evening. He offered no explanation as to where or with whom he was going or when he would return. If Glenna would only inquire. If she would only display that much interest, it would be enough.

But Glenna didn't. Instead, when Stuart came down to his dinner, he found Glenna dressed in her finest, waiting for him.

"You'll have to eat alone tonight, darling," she cried. "I'm going out."

And she went. Without another single word she went, and left Stuart alone with a poorly cooked dinner and his thoughts.

Stuart was thunderstruck! Aghast! Overcome! He sat for a long time thinking. At last he decided that it must be so. Glenna had ceased to love him.

Dispiritedly he got his hat and coat and went out. For more than an hour he walked the streets, and at last dropped into a movie to kill time and to try to still the maddening thoughts that harassed him. He found a seat and sat like one in a daze. He tried to concentrate on the picture in front of him, but it was like trying to listen to the ticking of a clock with an express train thundering past.

He sat for hours, through one performance and then another. People came and went around him. And at last, as the final performance of the evening drew near its conclusion, the audience began to thin out. Save for a handful of spectators Stuart sat alone, slumped down in his seat, from appearances asleep.

At last it was over. The lights flashed up and an usher came down the aisle to shake him gently by the shoulder. The usher had to shake him more than once, for at that moment Stuart was visualizing Glenna attending some gay night club in company with another man.

He roused himself with an effort. He looked around, blinked, tried to recall where he was, and after a moment succeeded. He stood up, reached for his hat—and stared.

Someone else was occupying the seat next to him. Someone who looked at him with wide, startled eyes. Someone who tried to speak his name and couldn't. But it wasn't necessary. For the someone was Glenna, and Stuart, seeing that look in her eyes, knew that she had tried the same remedy, and she, too, had failed.

Early American Style Simplest of Furniture

"Colonial" is a general term designating those architectural and furniture styles produced while America was still under England's rule and for a short time after the Declaration of Independence . . . the period from 1608 to about 1830. On the other hand, "Early American" designates only one period of this span of years—the very earliest, from 1608 to about 1720.

Early American is the simplest of all American styles. Few of the early settlers were from wealthy classes; they were unsophisticated pioneer people of humble origin, concerned primarily with providing for their families the simple necessities of life. Their first houses were built of pine because that wood was plentiful all about them. There was little thought of making those houses "showy" or "pretty" or "decorative." Their purpose was to keep out the weather, the forest animals and Indians. Walls were mostly wood paneled because plaster was expensive and hard to get.

The furniture that went into these houses was extremely simple and practical, features which are still its greatest appeal. There were few cabinet-makers among the settlers, so carpenters turned their hand to furniture making. Naturally they copied, from memory for the most part, the current styles in Europe, depending upon the country from which they had come. The Pennsylvania settlers, for instance, were originally from England and Germany; those in New England and Virginia were for the most part from England; those who settled along the Hudson and Delaware rivers were from Holland and Sweden. The furniture which they built, therefore, was provincial versions of the modes of their respective countries.

New Ore Fields

Alaska this year will produce between 50 and 60 tons of tin, and government geologists are reported to have found new fields of the ore in Arctic Alaska, Jack Underwood, manager of the Washington, D. C., bureau of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, announced recently. The known fields are being surveyed thoroughly and if the deposits are extensive enough a tin smelter may be erected in the Puget sound country. Underwood reports that a big force of government geologists is making a complete survey of Alaska's strategic mineral resources, with the hope also of finding chrome, which now comes from West Africa, and manganese, imported largely from Russia and Brazil. He declared that some chrome is being mined in the Cook's Inlet district and that quicksilver has been discovered in the Kuskokwim River area.

And most of all a new group of men to admire pretty, vivacious, young Mrs. Nichols.

could depend on that. And he could resort to it whenever need be. Now, for example.

And so Stuart said casually one evening, "Let's have the Laceys over tomorrow night. Inez is rather attractive, don't you think?"

Stuart could feel Glenna's eyes on him. He knew what she was thinking; knew that they had only met the Laceys once, and the fact that he had called Mrs. Lacey by her first name might mean anything.

But Glenna, after a moment, said, "I'd love to. Eliot suggested that we get together only last night."

Eliot! Only last night! Stuart fought a desire to leap to his feet and demand an explanation. Where had she seen Eliot Lacey last night? He glanced up, but Glenna was already at the phone dialing the Laceys' number.

The Laceys came on the following evening. But Stuart's well-formed plans went all to smash. It was quite useless devoting a lot of attention to Mrs. Lacey when Glenna wasn't even watching him, especially when she seemed so occupied with Eliot Lacey.

Stuart was bitter in defeat. But he wouldn't give up. The next evening they attended a party at the Masons, and he singled out the pretty Mrs. Keyes and tried to give her a lot of time. But it was hard work, hard because he had to keep one eye on Glenna; and every time he located her she was dancing with one of the younger married men and seemed to be having a merry time. Once he saw her strolling in the conservatory with Ken Wilson.

The situation left Stuart in a helpless rage. He couldn't very well reprimand Glenna for what she was doing, not after he'd set the pace himself. And he couldn't very well admit defeat by quitting, either. No, he'd have to bring her to terms, have to show her how fortunate she was in having him for a husband.

It wasn't until after the thing had been going on for a week, during which time Stuart openly paid court to a half dozen of the prettier girls in their crowd—only to have his efforts totally lost on Glenna, who, in the meantime, seemed to be finding considerable pleasure and satisfaction in the attentions of as many young men—it was only then that a most alarming thought occurred to Stuart. Perhaps, after all, Glenna didn't love him! Perhaps she was seeking the things from other men that she had found lacking in her own husband.

The thought tormented him, tortured his soul, kept him awake nights, made him panicky with fear and desperation. To lose Glenna would be to lose life.

Quite desperate with himself, Stuart conceived one last scheme which, he hoped, would bring the sign or word from Glenna's lips that would lead to an explanation of the whole hideous thing. He came home early one night and rushed to his

Age of Plants, Animals

Plants exceed animals in the length of their lives and, surprisingly enough, in the shortness of their lives also. Parrots belong to the century group; elephants may attain an age of two centuries. A good record for the animals, but on the plant side we have the California Sequoia trees living for 50 centuries.

At the other extreme are some bacteria which have a life cycle of only 20 minutes, shorter than any animal's life.

AUTOMOBILING AND THE BLOOD TEST

"Pull over to the curb!"
"What for?"

"For a blood test."
"But I ain't bleedin', officer!"
"You WILL be!"

This may be a typical Sunday afternoon dialogue in heavy auto traffic this summer. Already one state, New York, has passed a law making the alcoholic content of the blood stream admissible court evidence in the case of alleged drunken driving.

If your blood shows 15-100ths of 1 per cent alcohol, you're pickled. And if it holds more than 5-100ths but less than 15-100ths, you're not any too sober.

It has always been the custom to judge whether an automobile driver was soured or sober by his behavior, breath and monologue after the moment of impact. But it is going to be a matter for a laboratory from now on.

Once you just called a cop if some driver returning from a wedding tried to go between your front headlights, mistaking your flivver for two bicycles. Now you call a chemist.

Little week-end travels,
Little drops of gore,
Tell which driver's half stewed
And which driver's more.

The cry after each sound of ripping fenders will be, "Quick, officer, the needle!" And arrangements may have to be made to have a chemical laboratory at every pumping station.

Auto—and the Blood Test.

You may be able to tell how many times a man has been arrested for drunken driving by the needle marks on his arm.

Can't you picture the scene: You are tooling along the highway when some fellow tourist tears off your left fender. You leap out, fire in your eye and demand, "Whatzammattah? Doncha know how to drive?" He falls out of his car, zig-zags unsteadily to your side and remarks, "Lisshen, whoosha think thinkya talking to whaffor and what-va big idea comin' oush side street sixty miles sour and nosh give no warning, huh?"

Now up to 1941 you could just draw back and say, "Why, you're drunk, mister!" But not any more. You've got to get a needle and make sure!

But where? Have you a needle on you? Probably not.

So you yell for a cop. Here is where the catch comes in. The blood test to be legal must be taken within two hours of the collision. What chance have you of locating a cop these days inside of two hours?

Of course, if the drunk is a good fellow and wants to be fair, he will give you a little of his blood voluntarily. If he is the right type autoist, he will carry a needle on him, jab his arm and let you have a few drops with a polite "Here's my blood. Just call me up and if I'm drunk, let me know. We can adjust things."

If you, too, are a good sport you will let him have a few drops of your blood, too. Fair is fair.
